

Serving Changemakers

A lot of people who feel a strong call to change the world automatically assume that they need to invent a new nonprofit organization, or start their own movement from the beginning. The smart way to start your Changemaker career is to do some research and see if the organization or movement you are trying to start already exists. If it does, then simply find a way to get involved and support what is already happening in your field of interest.

There is also an overabundance of leader “wannabe’s” in the world of changemaking. Yes, everyone wants to be a leader, to be the number one, but that’s neither practical, nor desirable. Working together cooperatively as a whole will have a greater positive effect than each of us working separately, on our own. So serving and supporting other Changemakers might be the best way for you to do your part in changing the world, and even get paid for doing so!

Check out the career opportunities listed below to see what’s interesting, then do some more research. Find out what’s required of you to get started in that career field. Are there internships available? Is there a special school you should apply to? Where are these jobs located? Do you or your family know someone in that career field? Are any of your friends interested? Chances are you’re not the only one! Network with others and have fun searching!

- * Business Coach
- * Technology Developer
- * Virtual Assistant
- * Salesperson
- * Markteter
- * Life Coach
- * Consultant
- * Workshop Leader
- * Fundraiser
- * Executive Director
- * Employee of Social Enterprise
- * Author
- * Photographer
- * Videographer
- * Media Consultant
- * Seminar Leader
- * Event Planner
- * Philanthropist
- * Social Enterprise Investor
- * Public Relations Consultant
- * Social Media Developer
- * Operations Coordinator
- * Recruiter
- * Retention Coordinator